

10 Activities Christian Wives could be Doing to Restore Society (after they quit their careers)

Once again, for all of those brothers out there who think careerism is okay for Christian women, let me just provide you with a list of the incredible things the godly wife could be doing in the home. It's only a partial list, but even with a handful of activities the Christian wife would be transforming our communities if she took to them. I hope you can see in your heart the same vision that I can:

1: Homeschool the children instead of sending them to secular humanist schools

2: Take in other children from the community and provide them Christian home education for free if they are forced by circumstances to attend the secular schools

3: Care for the sick and disabled in the community through love, prayers, charity, medical aid and transportation

4: Clean up the neighborhood by petitioning community businesses to stop selling immoral material and showing immoral images

5: Teach younger women and girls how to be godly wives, mothers and homemakers

6: Support pro-life causes through vigils, outreach and support for pregnancy centers

7: Care for the poor through charity, assistance and prayers

8: Start a home business, one founded in writing on Christian principles, as opposed to the countless businesses founded on secular ones

9: Provide handmade goods, handmade food and garden produce for the family and community

10: Bear more children, since this is a central purpose of marriage, of a woman's nature and even has a key roles in her sanctification.

What you're looking at above is a partial vision of what would transform the world. The Christian wife, by obeying God, would be a walking, talking, praying social service. She would be the very lifeblood of our community. We're talking about millions of children educated, and more than that, millions of children who would otherwise be trained in atheistic naturalism being trained in the Bible. It's also a vision of innumerable members of our churches and greater society being cared for by the Christian wife, because she has followed God's calling. It's even a vision of bringing work back close to home, and to the faith. We try to make life a lot more complicated and difficult than it needs to be. Often the right answer is the simplest. Let's humble ourselves, forget about what our desires or our culture arm-twist us into, and brothers let's follow God instead.

Women, Almighty God calls you to the home. Not to careers. Men, if you're the ones arm-twisting your wives into full-time employment (and I know sometimes you are) you need to stop what you're doing. You are the leaders of the home and you are in plain conflict with God when you demand your wife abandon her calling. It is harmful to the home and sets a poor example for others. As a community and as the Bride of Messiah, we need to start repenting of our worldly lifestyles. When we do, and when we try just some of what I've suggested above, we will see our Savior work wonders through His saints.
